

Minor Refinements Made in Weight Management

The NCAA Wrestling Committee modified several rules and championships administration policies at its annual meeting April 8-11 in Indianapolis. While the committee made no sweeping changes, there were several significant alterations that the committee hopes will help college wrestling overall.

The committee took note of the current state of college wrestling, which is particularly good at the Division I level. That was evidenced by the championship's success in Albany, New York, this year with sold-out crowds and unprecedented levels of television coverage and media attention - largely due to Iowa State University's Cael Sanderson and his perfect college career.
